

The Unusual Wish

A little girl, a big dream, and the courage to be herself

A story by Sreebha Sasidharan

This is Amy

Amy was a cheerful, curious girl who loved school, her friends, and the little adventures that made each day special.

A Little Difference

One morning, Amy noticed something unusual. Her left hand felt wonderfully different from her right. She wondered what she could do with it.

Friends Are Curious

At school, her friends asked questions. Amy smiled shyly. She did not know the answer yet, but she was ready to discover it.

The Unusual Wish

That night, Amy looked at the stars and made a wish: “I wish I could try something new—something that would make me feel special.”

A Little Note

The next morning, Amy found a note on her desk: "Sometimes, trying something different helps us understand ourselves in a new way."

Try Something New

With a little courage, Amy joined the art club. At first, using her left hand felt strange. Then she began to enjoy it.

New Friends, New Skills

Amy decided to try something new.

She joined the art club
at school.

At first, it felt strange.
But slowly, she discovered that she really enjoyed it!

Amy met new friends and learned new skills. She discovered that trying something new did not mean leaving her old friends behind.

Left-Hand Magic

She realised that trying new things didn't mean leaving her old friends behind.
it just helped her find more of what she loved.

Soon, Amy's confidence grew. She painted flowers, built towers, and created beautiful things. Her left hand had its own kind of magic!

Sharing Her Story

Amy gave a little presentation to her class. She told everyone that being different can feel scary at first—but it can also lead to wonderful surprises.

The Wish Comes True

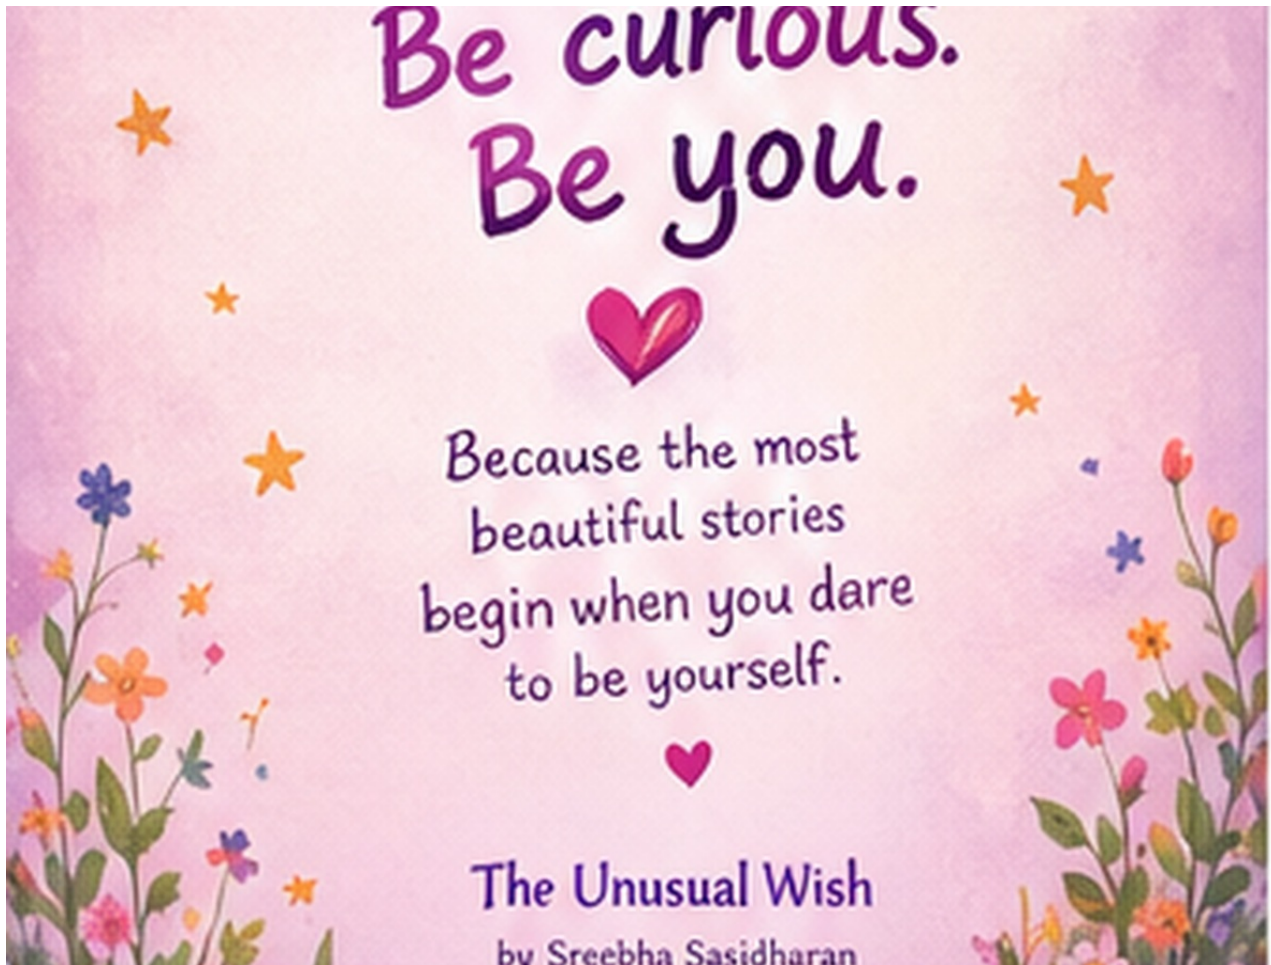

Amy realised that her unusual wish had come true—not through a spell, but through courage, curiosity, and believing in herself.

A Happy Heart

That evening, Amy went home smiling. She knew she could keep learning, exploring, and being herself, one brave little step at a time.

The Moral

Being different is not a problem. It is a special gift. When we try new things, we discover hidden strengths and learn to become the best version of ourselves.

Be kind. Be curious. Be you.

The End

Thank you for reading

May every child feel brave enough to explore, learn, and be wonderfully themselves.
